MOPD Director's Report

Director Maria Town began her report about the Mayor's City's Safer Streets campaign in response to the death of Jesse Perez and Alicia Adams previously mentioned in the public comments. Two people hit and killed attempting to cross the street at an accessible intersection. She talked about working with MOPD Disability Advocates and Transit Advocates to identify what changes need to occur to increase pedestrian safety. Mayor Turner charged Director Town to develop a full strategy for the city of Houston by Tuesday and then have it ready for a press conference this afternoon. A new Service Request for 311 has been requested to report safety and accessibility concerns at sidewalks and intersections. The City will get a better view of what the needs are for the city with this new app. The 311 App response person will have a script that they will use for callers who call 311. This position will be a safe street coordinator whose responsibility is to address the broader safety within the city. The sidewalk can often be the either responsibility of the city, Metro or County. Sometimes the information gets lost in the data as to whose responsibility it is to get the sidewalks fixed. The other part of the campaign is Public Awareness and Engagement. Changing driving culture and behavior is a focus. There is a high need to reduce distraction driving. The mayor wants city council member to walk with members of the disability community who walk and roll to get a better sense of what it takes to navigate through the city sidewalks. They are also working on a Sidewalk ordinance to remove obstacles in the sidewalk and make access improvement. Finally, the mayor has directed the Houston Police department to devote greater resources to enforce existing laws. Director Town stated that we have a wonderful pedestrian ordinance and drivers need to know that they are breaking the law and the cost of it.
