CITY OF HOUSTON

Citizens voluntarily serve on boards, commissions, committees, councils, corporations, and authorities. These groups assist by fostering the economic, political, and social growth of the City of Houston. The partnership between the public and private sectors is vital in the decision making process necessary for municipal government to achieve these goals. As board members, citizens participate in the process by acting as servants to the City by setting policy, settling disputes, aiding fellow citizens, and planning for the future.

The Mayor's Office of Boards and Commission seeks to involve residents of Houston who are willing to volunteer their time, expertise, and personal resources. They must be dedicated to benefiting the community. More than 2,000 people are currently working to contribute to a better quality of life in our city. The City of Houston is grateful for their effort and applauds their hard work.
